Girgis specializes in dispute settlement, with a particular focus on energy-related disputes; media and entertainment; construction; M&As; corporate and commercial agreements; banking and finance; telecommunications; and intellectual property.

He is one of the youngest Egyptian lawyers to be appointed to tackle some of the most difficult arbitration cases in Egypt and the Middle East. As a student, Girgis was one of very few who initiated the new trend in Egypt of combining both an LL.B. and a BA in Economics and Business Administration from Cairo University and the American University in Cairo simultaneously, because he did not simply want a law degree like most lawyers but wanted to revolutionise the entire legal sector altogether. Equipped with his knowledge of the inner workings of businesses, the complexities of the law, and the intersection of the two has given Girgis a unique ability and a competitive advantage in the corporate/legal world. He then travelled to the USA to receive an LL.M. in International Legal Studies from Georgetown University Law Centre and returned to Egypt in 2005 to become a Public Prosecutor before resigning in 2007 to become a full-time legal practitioner.
